By-SCOTT YOUNG

In this issue the ACCENT is on NEW TALENT. On the cover, Lillie Bryant, promising vocalist with the Thunderbirds, a singing aggregation. On page 5 we present our first short story (Nothing You Can Put Your Hand On) by Richard G. Hall. Elsewhere in the magazine, Rev. Eustace L. Blake reveals a delicate insight in the approach to a Happy Marriage. Joe Sheppard ("Shep") promising young cartoonist brings his special talent for humor. William Hunter Maxwell, veteran newspaperman's "Homespun Wisdom" contributes gentle, warm, philosophic tidbits and poetry. Happy are we to bring these dimensions of the Arts and Letters to our readers.

THE CHALLENGE OF CHANGE

The greatest controversial issue to hit northern New Jersey is the Port of Authority's plan to build a Jet Port in Morris County. The indignation of the residents of the area is understood and appreciated, for their's is beautiful country and hardships affect those whose properties would be taken and those who would be exposed to the noise, etc. To duplicate the near perfect physical propensities that contribute to a great way of living will be difficult.

THE JET AGE

In our opinion this presents a great opportunity to plan and build effectively for the future. The Jet city which would include related industries and services, etc., could well be the hub of a new and better planned metropolis than any we have seen. Spreading far to the southwest and northwest is abundant, beautiful land to build new planned model towns and smaller cities, with wider streets, ample parking and the many advantages our heavily populated cities can-not possibly offer. Too, the new smaller towns and cities would make it possible for many city dwellers to move farther out and enjoy a better way of living. This would relieve conjested conditions in the cities and could tend to make the necessary redevelopment and rebuilding of cities less difficult. Practical plans of decentralization could be brought about in time as just a part of the major plans. Un-folded on a large canvas with all perspectives etched in, unemotionally in their scaled proportionate entirety, we believe the good would outweigh the evil and bring about the greatest good to the largest number of people. For this reason we favor the building of the Jet Port city.

Nothing You Can Put Your Hands On

By Richard Gary Hall

Ed. Note: This introduces the author, a native of East Orange, N. J., Korean veteran and senior at St. Peter's College, Jersey, N. J. Recent stories have appeared in the College Literary Review. He has his sights set on the plateau occupied by the Wrights, Yerbys and Hemmingways. We believe with time and application his goal will be achieved.

AGNUM CORNELL sat at the great oaken desk looking out across the harbor at the rugged, rock-hewn skyline of Manhattan. The sunlight, passing through the large picture window, fell across his face and formed deep shadowy hollows beneath his brows. And the eyes were a clear, hard steel gray beneath the jutting ridge of the forehead. Magnum reached for a cigarette and lighted it, cupping his huge, magnificent hands around the flame. He looked at the great veins swelling across the back of them, running between the solid, moundlike knuckles. He thought of the past, of the "old days", before he had joined the swivel chair set, before the conservative suits and the cocktails in the afternoon. He remembered the crowded, sweltering streets of the lower east side where he had grown up. He remembered the steel mill and the breweries and the cannery. These were the places he had worked to earn his way through college. The clear sunlight played along the ridges of the hands and Magnum moved them slowly in the light. He smiled to himself and leaned far back in the swiveled chair. His gaze moved from his hands to the blue-gray smoke of the cigarette as it rose silently into the afternoon air. Then, turning back toward the desk, Magnum noticed for the hundredth time the beginning of a definite, and to him somewhat embarrassing, paunch. Well, an extra fifteen minutes or so in the steam baths would fix that, he thought. And after all, a man so burdened with the complexities of executive life could not be expected to remain the lean, sound sleeping man of action he had been as a youth. But the hands remained loyal to the past and there were no falsehoods there! Magnum held them up to the light again. Unconsciously he pulled his abdominal muscles inward and his mind paused for a moment, thinking of the scotch he had to drink in the evenings to insure sleep. All falsehoods! Magnum muttered half aloud. He rose and walked to the window.

The sunlight came out of the east and lighted the smoke-bound harbor with a gray, wet light. The tugs churned white paths of spoondrift before them as they crossed and recrossed the harbor. Magnum ground out the cigarette and his eyes followed the movement of a bus far below on the wide boulevard. Great height seemed to give a man a feeling of power, Magnum thought; a feeling that he was not a part of what was going on below, a certain objectivity; a view of the whole, or at least the immediate whole. But as President of Straymore, Weston and Grimsby, Inc., Manhattan Division, Magnum tried to be objective as much as was humanly possible. He did not particularly like the finely chiseled features and the ultra-detached, polished behavior of the firm's top executives. Nor did he like the stereotyped uniformity of the conservative suits, the gray distinguished temples and the practiced smugness of the firm's present board of directors. But over the years Magnum developed the perfect attitude for dealing with what he called, "the front office blue bloods". He simply refused to ascend, even so much as one rung, the rickety ladder of affectation. He did not join them in the evenings at their country clubs, nor in the afternoons at their cocktail clubs. He had his own special bar he visited every noonday and his evenings were usually spent at home with Bernice and their youngest son, Greg. The other two boys were away at college most of the year.

Of course there was a good deal of resentment directed toward Magnum by the upper executive echelon. But he expected such treatment when, long ago, he made the decision to be himself and not try to be something he wasn't. None of them liked him for it, none of the bluebloods that is, but the people loved him. Great firms are peopled a.

cities are, Magnum thought; by peons. And the peons were the ones who loved him—from the gray-suited junior executives to the phlegmatic, white coated night porter who cleaned spittoons in the main lobby; from the stiff, starch-bloused secretaries to the eager, bright-eyed errand boy that brought coffee around in the mornings. They, the office workers, admired him because they knew what he stood for: straightforward, unpretentious competitiveness. The porter was not concerned with such abstractions. He was conscious only of the warmness, the quickening of his blood, the sense of belonging he felt when, passing through the lobby each evening, Mr. Cornell would smile and say crisply: "Goodnight, John, she's all yours now," or something to that effect. He did not understand the rest of it, the things that went on upstairs. And, moreover, he did not care.

Magnum turned away from the window and looked at the huge pile of letters on his desk. He sat down at the desk and began reading the morning mail. Suddenly, the office buzzer rang and Magnum reached for the switch.

"Yes, Miss. Kramer?"

"Your appointment with Mr. Straymore is in half an hour, sir," came the reply.

"Thank you, I'd almost forgotten," Magnum said, reaching for a cigarette.

"I'll phone Mr. Straymore's secretary and tell her you're on your way, sir."

"Thank you, I'll leave immediately." Magnum pushed the switch into the off position and lighted the cigarette. The smoke encircled his head in a silver-gray fog. What is it this time?, Magnum thought. Maybe the Jason deal fell through at the last minute. Magnum sighed and stood up. It was always an unpleasant experience going to see Arthur Straymore Jr. Magnum did not relish the thought of entering the leather filled dignity of the "old man's" office and seeing Straymore the younger, with his impeccable gray suit and his thin, delicate hands. Straymore senior! Magnum thought, there had been a man! Vigorous, strong-jawed and generous; and truly a financial genius. Magnum remembered Straymore Sr. calling him into his office: "Magnum," he had said, looking out at him from the piercing, deep-set eyes, "we need a good man to head the Manhattan division. The job's yours if you want it." That was almost eleven years ago. But now, the old man had been dead three years and Straymore Jr. was President and controlling stock holder of the Firm. Since the death of Straymore Sr., Magnum was conscious of a strange, subtle uneasiness each time he was called to the head office. It was as though he was being "put on the carpet," tested, watched. But it was an accepted fact, even among the blue-bloods, that after Straymore Sr., Magnum had done as much for the firm as any executive in its long history. For this reason Magnum was tolerated, but with a certain "cat and mouse" type of relationship with the firm's upper-upper crust. Magnum put on his hat and coat and started for the door.

Outside, the air was brisk, and blew in gusts that lifted the fallen leaves, swirling them along the streets. The sun shone clear along the avenues and traffic moved at its usual pace; snarling, moving ahead, then tangling again and the drivers showing angry faces out the windows—and the neurotic tremors passing from the drivers to the vehicles; powerful, chrome covered vehicles—and the cars themselves seeming to respond to the blinding compulsion to hurry-up.

The first breath of winter was in the air. November wrenched the last brown leaves from the trees, dispossessing them; and the trees stood along the avenues like wooden sentinels with their arms outstretched. Magnum pulled the collar of his coat about his neck and signaled for a taxi. Seated in the rear of the cab, Magnum stared out the window at the pedestrians shoving and crowding along the sidewalk. The early November sun felt warm coming through the window and Magnum turned his collar down. He lighted a cigarette and leaned back against the seat, his consciousness slowly turning inward, away from the crowds and the sounds of life beyond the window, away from the sight of the naked limbs stripped clean by the envious hand of winter. (cont'd page 6)

Nothing You Can Put Your Hand On

When the door to Straymore's office opened, Magnum saw the executive seated behind a large, maple desk. There was the same tenseness about the office that Magnum had noticed in the past; like walking into a room without knocking, Magnum thought, that's the way it always felt coming into Straymore's office. George Conway sat in a leather chair beside Straymore's desk. He was Vice President of the firm. Conway sat smoking a long cigar and talking to Straymore. They both looked up as Magnum entered.

"Magnum, good to see you," Straymore said, rising and extending his hand toward Magnum.

"How are you, Arthur?" Magnum said, grasping the hand and feeling the soft, almost effeminate quality of the hand. Magnum turned toward Conway and smiled. "George, it's been quite a while. How are things in Philadelphia?" George Conway puffed on the cigar as he shook Magnum's hand.

"As well as can be expected, Magnum," Conway said. Then, after he had pursed his wide mouth over the end of the cigar again; "I understand you wrapped up the Jason deal in a rather shrewd manner; congratulations."

"Have a seat, Magnum," Straymore said, offering him a cigar from a wooden, leather trimmed box.

"No, thank you, Arthur," Magnum said. "I'm afraid I haven't acquired a taste for cigars yet." Magnum lighted a cigarette and sat back in

"You know, George and I were just discussing Jerold Ashby," Straymore said. "His death certainly came as a shock to the whole firm."

"Jerold was a fine man," Magnum said, leaning forward in the chair, to reach the ashtrav.

"He certainly was that," Conway agreed, looking at Magnum.

"I suppose you've had a devil of a time replacing him," Straymore said, looking at Magnum with his clear gray eyes.

"It wasn't easy," Magnum said.

"No, I suppose it wasn't," said Conway, glancing toward Straymore, a faint smile on his lips. Straymore removed a cigar from the wooden box and lighted it. He leaned back in the leather, swivel chair.

"Tell me, Magnum," he said, looking at the end of the lighted cigar, then at some papers on his desk, "what possessed you to choose a Negro as Jerold's successor?" The clear, emotionless eyes raised from the desk top and looked coldly at Magnum. George Conway seemed to slide a bit lower in his chair, but he said nothing. They both looked at Magnum.

"I needed a good man, Arthur. One I could depend on; one who could step right in without a three or four week assimilation period. Of course you recall we were just in the midst of the Jason deal when Jerold died?"

"I know all that, Magnum and I understand the position you were in," Straymore raised his hand and let it fall back to the desk, "but why a Negro, Magnum?"

Conway turned sideways in the leather chair and leaned hard on the arm of it. The large, pouched swellings beneath his eyes gave his face a tired, sleepless appearance.

"Look, -," Magnum said, reaching for the ashtray again.

"You should have used more discretion," Conway said, pointing the wet, chewed end of the cigar toward Magnum. He looked at Straymore for approval. Straymore nodded.

"George is right, Magnum. You're not turning crusader on us are you?"

"I'm not turning anything," Magnum said, "but certainly you're not too blind to see that it's time for this firm to ----"

"We're not going to have it, you know," Straymore said quietly and with such finality that Magnum felt a tightening at the bottom of his stomach. It was almost as though something concrete propelled Straymore's words; something that Magnum might put his hands on if he could isolate it, dislodge it from the subterfuge of words; if he could peer behind the guise of manners, beneath the innuendoes, the subtleties, the artifices of human action he would lift the soiled gauze and lay the festering wound open. He ground out the cigarette in the ashtray.

"Before you condemn the man I think you should look at his work," Magnum said, looking from Straymore to Conway. Conway's face was a blank and Magnum looked away.

"As President of the board of directors, Magnum, I think I can safely express the feelings of the other members." He turned to Conway. "Do you agree, George?"

"Quite so, quite so, A. S.," Conway said clearing his throat.

"And exactly what are the feelings of the board, Arthur?" Magnum asked. Straymore looked at him for several moments before he spoke.

"Magnum," he began, his voice assuming a friendly, almost paternal quality, "you are no errant schoolboy being chastised by his teacher for not having a textbook. You have been a part of this firm long enough to know that we have never had a Negro or a Jew in an executive position. Yet you defy the policy and choose a Negro as Jerold Ashby's successor."

Magnum rose and walked to the window. Below, in the street, pedestrians swarmed across the wide, sunswept boulevard, looking like specks of dandruff that had grown legs and now moved about on the ridges of a great skull. Magnum turned away from the window.

"When I chose Wesley Barnes to take Jerold's place, I knew that I was choosing a man who was more than qualified for the job." The President and Vice President of Straymore, Weston and Grimsby, Inc. looked at one another. They were both enjoying the whole thing immensely. This man standing before them with the large truckman's hands was about to preach equality to them and this was one of the few things in life which still amused them. They settled comfortably in their chairs. Magnum continued, talking in a level, quiet voice. "This may possibly come as a shock to you gentlemen, but in my opinion, Wesley Barnes is a better executive than Jerold Ashby could have ever been."

Conway stirred perceptibly in the leather chair. "I dare say, you're mistaken there," he said.

Magnum looked past Conway and did not see him. His mind picked nimbly away at the motionless closet of time past. "Wesley and I went to college together," Magnum continued, "and in those days he was the doer and I was just another shirt and tie with an arm full of books. Wesley was the class' president, he led the debating team, monopolized the Dean's list; well, just good in everything; scholar, athlete and one hell of a human being." Magnum paused and shook his head. "I mean he was really something." Then after college, Wesley went into the army and became an intelligence officer. I married and started raising a family. I lost track of Wesley until one day I received a letter from him. He had been wounded and was returning home. He asked me to go see his folks and to tell them that I heard from him. I went to see them and they told me Wesley had been hit twice and that he was to be decorated. They were quite proud of him and so was I. Wesley had fought for the things he believed in and I must admit that I felt a bit guilty when we met again. I hadn't even so much as seen the inside of an army base. Wesley uses a cane now and his hand won't parry a foil thrust anymore, but he's a brilliant, efficient executive and he still believes in the things he fought for." Magnum lighted another cigarette and sat down in the leather chair. He looked at Straymore's pale, delicate hand resting quietly atop the desk. "Wesley Barnes is as fine a man as you would ever want to meet. And gentleman," he paused, looking from one man to the other, "inside he's as white as you or me." Conway cleared his throat and looked at Straymore. Straymore stared straight ahead. Magnum reached for his hat and coat. No one spoke and the only sounds in the room came from the traffic in the street below.

At last, Straymore cleared his throat, placing the cigar in the ashtray as he turned to Magnum. "I'm too much of a realist I suppose, Magnum," he said, looking toward the large oil painting of Straymore Sr. that hung on the wall. "There is not room enough at the top for all of us. The board has requested Mr. Barnes' resignation. Will you see to it that he submits it by the end of the month?"

"And no later," said Conway. (concluded on pg 22)

BEAUTY QUEENS

Hope springs eternal in breasts of young women to seek fame and fortune via Beauty Pageants which swept the country in the passing decade, as never before in American history. Giving impetus to their hopes have been leading business men. Dolores Diane Daniels (top row-lft), Plainfield, N. J., was given a great big push in the right direction by Sonnie's Restaurant, Montclair, N. J., owned and operated by personable Cottrell Crawford.

MODEL

There's Something About a Model!! Even professionally talented young women as Theresa Elaine Braye, school teacher at Newton Street, Newark, N. J., devote time to the art, making her debut at widely acclaimed NAACP Benefit show at the Walter T. Dardens, Montclair; also recently appearing in exclusive fur show sponsored by WNJR Kitty-Bobbie show at home of Mrs. Jennie Lemon, Newark. Graduate of Shaw University, Rene's School of French Designing-Modelling, she is AKA soror and member Abyssinia Baptist Church, Rev. W. P. Means, pastor.

URBAN LEAGUE

"Backbone" of the League, the Essex County Guild executed interesting community programs during 1959, with 1960 added attractions when February 28th a panel of experts on social problems in discussion on "Caste and Class" as revealed in "Black Bourgeois" featuring Dr. E. Franklin Fraser, noted Howard University pyschologist is presented at Union Baptist Church, Montclair, N. J. Among Guild members (Front row-1-r) Mesdames Tina E. Bohannon; Wm. Happy Marriage

REV. EUSTACE L. BLAKE

Ed. Note: One of Newark, N. J. most progressive churches, St. James A. M. E. Court & High Streets, is pastored by, not only a learned and able preacher of the gospels, but expert marriage counselor--Rev Eustace L. Blake. At recent service for numerous couples he has joined in holy wedlock over 9-1/2 years, his message was hailed as one of the best solutions to avoiding the divorce courts or psychiatrist's couch. It is printed here with the hope our readers find their solutions to a Prosperous--Healthful--Happy New Year!!

I am trichotomous inthinking concerning the human construction. I believe man consists of body, mind and soul. For absolute matrimonial bliss, of necessity there must be adjustment of these 3 elements between Bride and Groom.

The man and woman once married are past the love and courtship stage, and are now where Love must be made real, Courtship no mistake. All incompatibilities must be annihilated. There must be a 3-fold adjustment.

Prior to exit of the Old Year, a unique and beneficial experience came to in holy wedlock, when they were invited to St. James AME Church by the mine to a most salutary message (see this page) by Rev Eustace L. Blake (centrouples he has joined together, W. Hiller; C. VanDevere; O. Wilbur; L. J. Hawkes; W. T. Allen; V. Massey; F. Bond; W. Felton; C. Wilson; R. Mos N. Porter; W. J. Boothe; C. Scott; and J. Jeters; E. Bergaman; R. Barre

First, PHYSICAL ADJUSTMENT—can be made by few on many sexual experiences according to temperaments, dispositions, eccentricities. Sex relationshould not be of the effervescent type, but come to a climax after some efforces consideration should be given to time element; each individual should strip to adjust himself or herself to the other individual. Two things must be remistered—that, in true love sex is not found in sex organs, but in the heart. In marriage sex is not to be considered the bargain, but only included in the begain. The purpose of marriage must not have a foundation in sex relational alone. Two people must have the idea of building and establishing a home, becoming a permanent unit in good society, and betterment of the world. Physical adjustment therefore is highly necessary. It is hard indeed for a marriage to eff to a good start without some degree of sex relation satisfaction. Limpshould never be reached—there should always be a reserve. Your mate should always be kept guessing. The full extent of your physical strength should your secret.

Second, MENTAL ADJUSTMENT-Man and wife should learn to think alike. Thoughts should not be identical-this is well nigh impossible. But trend of thought should be the same. "How can two walk together unless they agree". A tug of war between man and wife in thinking leads to no good. East and west mental attitude must not exist--both must go east or west. Mental adjustment must be based on patience, tolerance, understanding. Therefore if the mental adjustment is not secure, physical adjustment will become disrupted. Ment al adjustment in some respects should be made during courtship. After ment al oneness is cared for--spiritual oneness is next in order.

Third, SPIRITUAL ADJUSTMENT -- Man has a soul, he is an eternal being. Man's soul therefore should be knitted to the soul of his wife and vice vers a. This adjustment to some extent also should be made before marriage, completed after physical and mental adjustments. It can never be made until the man and woman come to the place where they can see the wisdom of their choice in each other. They must feel they were made for each other.

When proper physical adjustment is made, it will beyond a centilier of a doubt hold a marriage together. Physical adjustment may fall apart becaus e of sickness, old age, etc. Yet when proper spiritual adjustment is reached man and wife will continue to adore each other. We love our spouse at the beginning for what we think they are, but after spiritual adjustment is made we love them for what we know them to be,

Married couples should plan to get ahead; plans work better if you operate on a budget. Every man should strive to leave an estate for his family. Should a man with health and reasonably good fortune, fail to leave an estat e for his family after a marriage of a generation, when he is dead and buried emem- he should be dug up and paddled, then reburied. Lack of estate in the death of our men is the vulnerable spot in our economic structure. "When povert y peeps in the window, love takes wings".

Winning traits of man and wife should be kept alive after marriage. If a steak turns out to be a hot dog we may eat it, but with much disappointme n t. ysical Never let down to the point where your spouse loses respect for you. If there geto are children in the home, man and wife should operate as a team, giving only one front to the child. When a child succeeds in driving a wedge between his parents (it seems the smallest child knows how) neither parent will be able to control him. Parents should always respect their children. Annual Potentates Ball

Golconda Temple #24 PHA Shriners, March 25th take guests to the Terrace Ballroom for Annual Potentate's Ball, having found each year the guest list grows larger. By invitation only, guests are required to indicate attendance by making table reservations. Illustrious Potentate is Frank Lee, Chief Rabban and Assistant Chief, Joseph Jackson, Kelsey Brown; the High Priest and Prophet Ralph Sauls; Oriental Guide E. A. White; Illustrious recorder Al Chase, treasurer Dr. J. Fitzgerald, Lacey Brannic, co-chairman, which instructs children to obey parents, also instructs parents to provoke not their children to anger. Man and wife should never make the sad mistake of getting angry at the same time. If the wife is truly angry, he should subdue his wrath until the next day; if the husband is angry, she should go shopping today. Marriage is a game, played by rules; three of them should be obeyed--for success--Be true to God; True to each other, and save money.

It is as simple as that. All these ugly experiences are brought about by men and women disobeying all the laws of God and of man, and still hoping for the best. This is incompatible to physical, mental and spiritual well being A vow made at the altar should never be broken in this world, nor the next. God demands, Heaven desires, the Church requests and your Friends expect that the unions made at the altar will hold together through you, my brides and grooms, until Eternity. My benediction goes with you 'Glory to the Father, Glory to the Son, Glory to the Holy Ghost".

YOUR GAL SALLY ENTERS 1960 without qualms (despite another decrepit natal day New Year's eve) . . . assured of gallantry . . . talent . . . ability of our young people to make it a grand world. . . . Bravell (Bucky) Nesbitt of Elizabeth, N. J. equally at home with us oldsters as with his just past teenage friends. . . LaMar Whigham gallantly bending to plant a kiss on our cheek (no mistletoe at hand . . . could have been our candlelight brocade gown). . . . Handsome Eddie (Dr. and Mrs. Eddie Shelton, Newark, N. J., pride and joy) home from Howard Univ. for holidays (tall and engaging in manner). . . .
THE HOME HEARTH will continue bright . . . when such lovable happy couples as Douglas and Mary Whittle .. continue to build dream homes (Eppirt St., E. O.). . . . The Carter couple . . . with daughter Linda . . . son Buddy into brand-new Washington, D. C. home (Dr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Massey's relatives)....

LOVE WILL ALWAYS REIGN ... as we recall Corrinna Kay (Women's League of N. J.) sparkling diamond at College Women's talk o' town ball . . . proclaiming debonair Harry Wheeler has found his love!!

OLD FLAMES REKINDLED . . . to warm cockles of our heart . . . as the elegant Juanita Mulford . . . entered Topper's scintillating party at Thomms Continental Room . . . on arm of exhubby, debonair Chas. Dilsworth (N. Y. C.)

DEVOTION TO WIVES unquestioned . handsome Jimmie Ross gifting full-length mink to beloved wife Evelyn. . . . Nat Murrill with orchids at drop of hat to his beautiful Marion

NOTHING IS MORE EFFECTIVE

Nothing You Can Put Your Hand On

By Richard G. Hall

"Well, I'll be damned," Magnum said, pulling at his chin with his large, suddenly useless hands, "I'll be damned."

Straymore looked down at the papers on his desk again and Conway lighted the cigar that had gone out. Magnum stood up and walked to the door. He turned to face the two men seated beside the desk.

"And if I don't, Arthur, what then?" "In that case, Magnum, we" Straymore paused and looked at Conway, "and I think I speak for all the mem-

"Quite so, A. S.," Conway said, puffing of the cigar, his face lost in a tloud of smoke.

"--- might feel that you are getting too soft for the demands of your position," Straymore continued.

From the door, Magnum asked: "My resignation in other words?"

"Let's not use such harsh terms, Magnum. Let's just say that the firm has some fine young men waiting for advancement." Straymore smiled. "By the way, Magnum, how is the wife? and the boys?" He smiled again. Magnum felt the blood racing through his head, making his face hot and causing the huge vessels in his temples to throb. He looked at Straymore. "Just great," he said, opening the door.

"Give them my best," Conway said, from the leather chair. Magnum closed the door.

Back in his office Magnum stood beside the wide picture window, star-Ing down at the complex pattern of life that moved along the streets. Finally, he turned away and sat down at the desk. He looked at his hands, holding them up in the early afternoon sunlight. He turned them slowly In the light, watching the dark shadbws they made against the desk. He sat there for a long time, thinking and istening to the shrill whistles of the harbor boats. Finally, when the shadbws in the room had lengthened and grown dark, Magnum sighed wearily and reached for the control switch.

"Miss Kramer, would you ring Mr. Barnes' office, please?" Several moments passed.

"Mr. Barnes is on the line, Mr. Corhell."

"Thank you. Hello, Wesley!" Maghum felt the tightness in his stomach, "Magnum! what's up?"

"Uh--Wesley--would you mind--," Magnum cleared his throat, "coming up here right away? It's important and," he paused again, "not too pleasant."

"I'll be right up, Magnum."

Magnum placed the receiver on the hook and stood up. He walked back to the window. The sky was bright and cloudless and below, in the streets, he saw the people moving about like frightened ants, seemingly without order or reason. Magnum leaned his forehead against the cold metal frame of the window and began cursing softly.

Jazz Idiom LARRY GLOVER

The question has been posed--"Why gas Hour Glass closed?"--what is the story behind this elaborate nite club that featured some of the top artists in the jazz world?" You ask a 63 dollar question, we'll give a 64 dollar answer. A nite club in Newark must be supported and patronized by the public. Newark is very poor at this. We want something for nothing!

However, we go to New York and spend a fortune, perhaps not getting as much. Take Teddy Powell's or Sugar Hill--what happened? Ask yourself--did you support these clubs? True, prices are high and in some places exorbitant--Jersey as well as New York. Perhaps, if Hour Glass featured Sarah Vaughan or Anita O'Day, things would have been different.

Personally, I feel big bands would have helped--and perhaps even a mailing list as some outstanding New York nite clubs use.

IN CONCERT at Mosque featuring Dinah Washington, Al Hibbler, and Horace Silvers, etc., general public opinion was not very gratifying. We all hope for better arrangement next time.

ROY HAMILTON going strong and great at Nite Cap...KEY CLUB is back in swing, featured Hank Mobly and Betty Carter. LEN LEN'S better and better. KITTY TAYLOR (WNJR) listening to her beautiful stereo RPM sound...MARION ANDERSON at Mosque, Newark January 22....SARAH VAUGHAN on Dave Garroway's TV a.m. show New Year, great!! BIRD-LAND squeezed them in for Count Basic during holiday...CLUB WORLD editors have some beautiful old classical records...NINA SIMONE (Porgy and Bess) favorite on Clayburn & Finch (WNEW)....M.J.Q. John Lewis wrote score for motion picture "Odds vs Tomorrow". We give it 4 *

METROPOLE, (7th Ave N. Y.) featured 4 bands for Holiday (Dizzy Gillepsie, Cozy Cole, Red Allen, Sol Yaged)...ALLEN JACKSON band is still great...DAVE BRUBECK in N. Y. College date...COLUMBIA has a special album for members on Lester Young...ELLA FITZGERALD on Frank Sinatra show was the most!! with high rating.

THE JAZZ MESSENGERS metropolitan area quintette who appeared at the Hour Glass (before it closed) is composed of home boy Walter Davis of East Orange, Wayne Shorter of Newark on sax; Art Blakeley on drums, Lee Morgan on trumpet; Jimmy Merrett on bass, all from Pittsburgh, left for European tour. It's reported they'll make a film in Africa.

GREETINGS! HAPPY NEW YEAR!! Best of Health and Happiness!!
Our holiday spirits dampened by illness of hubby Floyd, hospitalized, and other relatives ill. One never realizes how fortunate one is until one makes a hospital visit and sees so many not able to be up and around. Our New Year's resolution--and yours--Give Thanks to the Almighty!!!

DATING BACK TO '59 Jazz Concert, people still buzzing about the manner in which the program was executed and long delay of Al Hibbler's appearance. Comic Timme Rogers did wonderful job, fronting to the capacity audience. Still, if the promoter had come out front and apologized to his paying public, we all would have better understood.

CONGRATULATIONS, to Thelma Williams, Robert Treat Jr. H. S. teacher and Ernest Murray, formerly of Ohio, recited wedding vows on Thanksgiving Day. Mr & Mrs Harold Arnett, proud papa and mama to a bouncing baby boy. Bob Troupe, making great strides in the merchandising field. All January '60 grads, keep striving for higher education.

LIVING

Homespun Wisdom

WILLIAM HUNTER MAXWELL

INSPIRATION

In any situation, it is the better wisdom for one to do the very best one can to bring about the best results. Having done that, then stand aside and wait for life's Chief Engineer and His Judgment. One can do no more.

BILL JARVIS SAYS—

Lovers need but little light to settle quarrels. And oftimes no light.

Sometimes the reason a wife appears so sleepy at morn is because she has been awake a goodly part of the night listening to hubby talk in his sleep.

Just a stray, strange, lonely strand of hair parked upon hubby's coat shoulder has oft been the cause of a "secession from the union".

PLAINPOEM

Living's Fun If we'll Let it Be Living is fun! Let's Live!
Let's Live and keep it fun,
Ere on earth our days are done!
Today! Tomorrow! Let's live!
And give to life the best we can give!
Living is fun! Whines and groans, let's defy!
Let's have our fun 'ere away we fly!
Work fair! Play fair! Sleep well!
Comfort not the whims of hell!
Eat, drink, love and do good,
Giving to life the kindness we should!
Living like that is a swell job done!
And that's what makes living so much fun!

THOUGHT-WAVES

Blisters sometimes bring bliss; but have a care lest the bliss be not worth the blisters.

It has been said that the end of every hog is the slaughterhouse. Even in this there may be a lesson for the 'road hog'.

Train the boy aright and the world will not be ashamed of the man.

Use today so well that tomorrow will not regret that today went before

SOMETHING TO REMEMBER

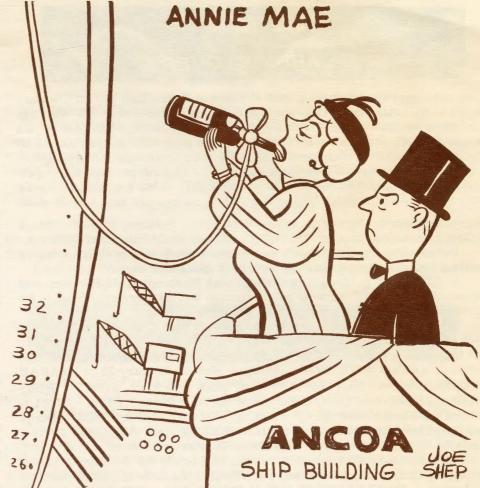

Progress is contagious. It is easily caught. And 'tis worthwhile being caught. Progress beckons. Progress welcomes. May men be thankful for the opportunity to thrive and arrive. Therefore take ye pride in the faithful adage.... "Help thou thy brother's boat across, and lo thine own has reached the shore."

ISN'T IT PROVOKING?

Ever come across one of those sharp, smart gals, indifferent and cynically alert? The type that pitches 'em high, wide or low and outside, never across the plate. She waits for you to open up.... How's my sugar? You tell me, she counters, I wouldn't know. Lovely hands you have, may I hold them? Don't bother, they won't run away. Oh, she's a frigid one. How about a little kiss? What about it?, she snaps. Let's take a walk, says you. You take it, says she, I'm not borrowing trouble and besides I don't take anything that's not mine. You're tough ain't you?, you counter. Why, are you thinking about biting me?, she retorts. Listen baby, how do I stand? Most folks use their feet, the bottom part, she snarls. ISN'T IT PROVOK ING?

VERA THICK SAYS-

You simply can't trust a man. And besides I have to slave too hard
